The Kitchens of Carton House were said to be the largest and most elaborate of their time. A number of original features are still in place. Kathleen's kitchen in particular, is one of the only kitchens in manor homes, built above ground during that era. It is said, the FitzGerald Family wanted their house staff to enjoy the view while working. Its location outside the main block of the house, was designed this way to ensure the culinary smells did not reach the nostrils of the family and guests before their meals were laid out in front of them.
